

challenging conversations

When we are facing a conversation that we have labelled 'challenging', there is usually something specific that we fear happening:

But here's another way to think about that fear:

F False E Expectations A Appearing R Real

What you expect, and what you hold in your thoughts or consciousness, becomes your real experience or your reality.

Your fears appear real to you, but they are fears for a future that hasn't happened yet – and may in fact never happen.

How to conquer your fears:

key skills for tackling a challenging conversation
