

The Ethical Decision-Making Model

At AstraZeneca, ethics is at the heart of everything we do. We believe in our power to be a force for good for people, society, and planet. Our power comes with great ethical responsibility, so we must take time to stop and consider whether our actions and decisions are ethical, always.

The Ethical Decision-Making model is a tool designed to help you pause and consciously reflect before making any ethical decision. It's made up of four questions...

Is it legal?

Understanding the legal and compliance regulations related to your role at AstraZeneca is crucial. If a decision violates any applicable laws or regulations, STOP.

Consider this...

- Do I know the legal framework well enough to make this decision?
- Am I familiar with our policies and processes, or should I look these up before deciding what to do?

Is it values-based?

Our AZ Values are designed to guide us, and we must consider them before making any decision.

Consider this...

- How does this decision support or conflict with our values?
- Have I considered all of our values before making my decision?

Could it impact our reputation?

We should always consider how our decisions and actions would be perceived by our colleagues, AZ stakeholders, patients, or if they were reported in the news or on social media.

Consider this...

- How might our decision be perceived by others?
- Even if a decision is legal, could it look unethical to someone else?

Do I need more information?

At AstraZeneca, we have a wealth of experience and expertise. So, if in doubt, reach out to someone for further information. This will help you make a more informed, ethical choice.

Consider this...

- What specific information am I missing that is crucial for this decision?
- Who can I ask to fill knowledge gaps?
- Can the decision be postponed to allow for a more thorough information-gathering process?
